1 Introduction to Wind Industry Classification Standard

The Wind Global Industry Classification Standard is a classification system for global industries launched by Wind Information in 2004 after extensive research on domestic and international industry classification standards, combined with the actual situation of China's economic development, to meet the needs of market research. The Wind Industry Classification Standard has the following characteristics:

Global Standard

Wind Information has conducted in-depth research on international industry classification standards and the development of China's capital market, and has established an industry classification standard that not only conforms to international standards but also applies to the Chinese market. It supports the inclusion of listed companies from around the world in the same classification system. Currently, the industry classification covers over 90% of the market value of listed companies globally.

Open and Transparent

The Wind Industry Classification Standard will be published through various channels, with the Wind financial terminal and the official website of Wind Information being the core channels for publication. Based on the continuous changes in practice, we will revise the Wind Industry Classification Standard irregularly, and any changes in industry standards will be promptly announced through various means.

Timely and Accurate

Wind Information has the most comprehensive content and complete data on the Chinese securities market, with a history of decades of global listed company data processing experience and professional teams that have a profound understanding of various industries. We can ensure the accuracy of Wind industry classification data and timely adjust industry changes based on changes in the main operating income of listed companies. At the same time, we always maintain close communication with listed companies and various institutional investors, continuously optimizing the industry classification of specific companies.

2 Revision of Wind's Industry Classification Standard

Since the launch of Wind's global industry classification standard in 2004, the global industrial structure has been upgraded and the main business types of listed companies have become increasingly diverse. Listed companies in industries such as the internet, service, new energy, and semiconductors have been increasing. In 2024, Wind will revise its original industry classification based on two principles: first, to keep in line with international industry classification standards and better serve the investment research needs of domestic and foreign investors; second, to improve localization based on China's national conditions by increasing the number of secondary industries, reducing the concentration of some industries, refining the granularity of tertiary industries, and optimizing the number of companies and market value distribution within fourth-level industries.

The changes to the classification standard after this revision include the number of sector remaining unchanged, the number of Industries Group being adjusted from 24 to 36, the number of Industries being adjusted from 69 to 82, and the number of sub-industries being adjusted from 163 to 169. The main revisions include:
